Independence, Mo.

Saturday morning at 6:15. April 22, 1933

My Dear Bess:

It was also a good day yesterday with a fine letter from you and Margaret. But I had the biggest day on record before the equalization board, and there'll be another one today. I am on my way to see Mr. Pendergast and I think I'm going to come out all right on the situation.

There was a family conference last night on the mill. Uncle Boulware is bound and determined to sell out and so are the Wells family. But Frank has been advised that your mother can vote her stock independently and I think that's what they'll do.

I am so glad the weather has been agreeable down there. It is still cold enough for a coat here and the wind is in the east this morning. I have been staying in Independence all week but will go to the farm tonight and stay over Sunday. This has been a strenuous week and I'm looking for another one tomorrow when next week begins. There has never been a time like this. I'll look for a letter today and every day. Tell Margaret I'll write her tomorrow. Hope you've seen Natalie. Tell Miss K. hello and keep writing. Lovingly Harry.
