Dear Bess:

Got letter number one today. It made the day bright even if it is cloudy and misty. Yesterday was the hottest day. It was well above ninety. Along about seven o'clock the wind turned to the north and it became very cool. Murray and I went home at six thirty, washed my face and hands and we went down to the Mayflower, met Mr. Griffith, who has Murray's job in Kansas and had dinner. We discussed all the ills of unemployment, relief and most everything else. About ten o'clock we went home and went to bed. I was too cold all night but too sleepy to get a blanket. Nettie writes me a note every day. She said you had sent her a letter in yesterday's note - seemed very much pleased over it. I am almost up to date again on mail. Yesterday and today were light in number.

I went to the White House this morning with Clark and Cannon to talk to the President about relief of flood sufferers, for whom Bennett had introduced a bill in the Senate and Cannon one in the House. I had a chance to tell Mr. Roosevelt what I thought of Mr. Mitchell. He very readily agreed with me. I am working as usual now but I'd do better if you and Margie were here. Kiss my baby and be sure and write often. Love Harry.
