Washington, D.C. June 25, 1935

Dear Bess:

Well that day missed has come to light today. No letter. I've a notion to call you tonight and reverse the charges after talking fifteen minutes. Your picture blew off the mantle yesterday and I'm somewhat superstitious so I had to call and see if it meant anything. It was a real relief to hear your voice.

I've called off the New York trip. With this tax business and all sorts of important things besides having to move I just couldn't make it. You also know it's a chore for me to write a speech and I won't let anybody else do it. You remember Harvey would be so mad at me in the campaign because I wouldn't say what he wrote. Got a letter from Mary today said they were well and getting along. I had Nettie send my two white suits to the laundry yesterday. I hope I get them back on time. I am wearing white flannel britches and brown coat today. Have to go to dinner with Minton and all the new Senators tonight. If it stays as cool as it is now I won't have to go home and change. Frank Farley, K.C. Pr & Lt took me out to dinner last night. Go to Shoops tomorrow night, nowhere I hope Thursday and Saturday and with Senator Robinson Friday. I was sleeping good at 11:30 last night, went to bed at 9:30, when old man Jamison called me up. I had the phone reconnected and I wish I hadn't. I got to thinking what if you wanted me in the night so I had her hooked up and that's what I got.

I am looking for two letters tomorrow. I've promised to take John and Harry over the Gettysburg battlefield Sunday and they will help me more when I get back. You thought that nice long Saturday letter ought to go for two, but I want one every day.

Kiss Marger and love to you Harry
