Dear Bess:

I am back in Washington at 3:00 o'clock. I left New York at 10:30 this morning after having breakfast with Emmett O'Malley at the Hotel Commodore. We then walked up to the Waldorf and I had a most pleasant visit with T. J. P. He was as pleased to see me as a ten-year-old kid to see his lost pal. I found that the governor had been on my side in everything he talked about and it looks as if everything is going to come out all right. I talked about county affairs too, and he's going to straighten them out along lines I suggested. It is much more pleasant going up there on the train than it is driving and my whole expense was only about five dollars more, so I guess it's worth the difference. It looks as if we may come home in two weeks and I sure hope we do. I am going over to see Harry Salisbury in a few minutes and stop by the office hoping to get a letter not a note this time. Yesterday was a very strenuous day for me but I'm somewhat rested today. Slept on the train both ways and went to bed at ten o'clock in New York--which usually isn't done. Wish I was home. Kiss Margey. Love to you, Harry
